PROJECT MANAGEMENT FOR ENTREPRENEURS

Garth Sutherland B. Sc. (Hons)
Project Management & Marketing Lecturer

The entrepreneur is not seeking to become a project management professional but seeking to make his/her business a success. The application of the core principles of project management will assist in doing that. At its simplest, any project is a combination of activities that, when completed, constitute a completed project. There are four key steps or processes to that.

1. An awareness of all the key individual activities that the full project requires to be completed.
2. Detailing the resources (time, money, and people) required to complete each individual activity.
3. Prioritization and sequencing of the individual activities into a start-to-end list.
4. The application and use of digital tools to allow start-to-end seamless modification of change communication that will ensure all parties will be fully aware of the impact of those changes.

The course will look at each of the steps, using both non-technical understanding and professional terminology. It will therefore appeal to entrepreneurs looking to upskill their project management capacity, as well as those who are involved in working with professional project managers in the corporate environment. In the second session you will learn how to use Project Libre software, which is available for free on the internet.

Date: Tuesday, 2 May

The Enneagram is a powerful and insightful way of understanding ourselves and others. Describing our typical patterns of behaviour, as we are all the 'drivers' behind these behavioural patterns, the Enneagram allows us to reflect on how we 'show up' in the world (both personally and professionally). This then helps us understand why we find some people, some relationships and some situations more challenging than others. Working with the Enneagram also gives us the tools to manage these challenges.

This workshop will introduce the Enneagram model, giving participants an understanding of the diversity of people and beginning the journey of self-discovery through the Enneagram.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT FOR ENTREPRENEURS

Garth Sutherland B. Sc. (Hons)

Project Management & Marketing Lecturer

The entrepreneur is not seeking to become a project management professional but seeking to make his/her business a success. The application of the core principles of project management will assist in doing that. At its simplest, any project is a combination of activities that, when completed, constitute a completed project. There are four key steps or processes to that.

1. An awareness of all the key individual activities that the full project requires to be completed.
2. Detailing the resources (time, money, and people) required to complete each individual activity.
3. Prioritization and sequencing of the individual activities into a start-to-end list.
4. The application and use of digital tools to allow start-to-end seamless modification of change communication that will ensure all parties will be fully aware of the impact of those changes.

The course will look at each of the steps, using both non-technical understanding and professional terminology. It will therefore appeal to entrepreneurs looking to upskill their project management capacity, as well as those who are involved in working with professional project managers in the corporate environment. In the second session you will learn how to use Project Libre software, which is available for free on the internet.

Keep your cool in class by implementing a progressive discipline model of classroom management, designed to release pupil learner pressure points before they escalate into conflict. Progressive discipline is a style of learner management that focuses on changing behaviour rather than punishment. It is a behaviour modification model which has been used successfully in many schools worldwide and what is significant about it is that instead of simply punishing inappropriate behaviour, it reinforces positive behaviour and actively engages learners and their parents in the process, ensuring accountability on the part of the learner for inappropriate behaviour. Explore this model and maximize control and minimize stress in your classroom.
